VET COLUMN

Amy Durham
BVetMed MRCVS

This month's article is all about certain parasites that are a particular problem in summer.

Fleas: Fleas are small brown insects. They mainly infest cats and dogs, and live in their fur. They feed by biting their skin and sucking blood. This causes itching and scratching, which is worse in animals that are allergic to flea bites. Heavy infestations can also cause anaemia, especially in kittens. Fleas can also bite humans, transmit tapeworm cysts and spread infections such as 'cat scratch disease' particularly in people with weak immune systems. Female fleas lay eggs which are white and just visible to the naked eye. The eggs drop off into the environment, incubate and then hatch larvae which develop into adult fleas. So if your pet gets fleas, unfortunately so does your house, and it can take a few months to completely get rid of them! If this happens, it is important to treat all your pets. Also clean and vacuum the house thoroughly, wash the pet beds on a high temperature and use an environmental household flea spray (move fish and birds first, as it is toxic to them). Remember prevention is far better than dealing with a flea infestation! It is best to use a prescription flea treatment, which usually comes as a monthly spot-on product applied to skin on the back of the animal's neck. Some flea treatments are also effective against ticks.

Ticks: Ticks are blood sucking parasites that live on vegetation and attach to passing animals. They pierce the skin and stay attached to the animal for several days to feed from their blood. Once fully fed, they drop off and lay eggs in the environment. Ticks are often found in woodland, rough upland and deer parks. They mainly bite dogs, but can also affect cats, wildlife and humans. Ticks spread diseases which can affect both animals and people, such as Lyme Disease (which in a recent survey was carried in 2% of ticks in the UK) and Babesiosis which is much rarer. If your pet gets a tick, it is best to remove it completely using a special tick remover, as infection can occur if the mouthparts are left behind. Please speak to your vet if you're not sure how to do this, if your pet becomes lethargic or unwell after a tick bite or if you have any other concerns.
